

"Our Personal Guarantee to all Skin Sufferers"

Elvey & Hulett.

We have been in business in this town for some time, and we are looking to build up trade by always advising our patrons right.

So when we tell you that we have found the eczema remedy and that we stand back of it with the manufacturer's iron clad guarantee, backed by ourselves you can depend upon it that we give our advice not in order to sell a few bottles of medicine to skin sufferers, but because we know how it will help our business if we help our patrons.

We keep in stock and sell, all the well known skin remedies. But we will say this: If you are suffering from any kind of skin trouble, eczema, prosiasts rash or tetter, we want you to try a full size bottle of D. D. D. Prescription. And if it does not do the work, this bottle will cost you nothing. You alone to judge.

Again and again we have seen how a few drops of this simple wash applied to the skin, takes away the itch, instantly. And cures all seem to be permanent.

D. D. D. Prescription made by the D. D. D. Laboratories of Chicago, is composed of thymol, glycerine, oil of wintergreen and other healing, soothing, cooling ingredients. And if you are just crazy with itch, you will feel soothed and cooled, the itch absolutely washed away the moment you applied the D. D. D.

We have made fast friends of more than one family by recommending this remedy to a skin sufferer here and there and we want you to try it now on our positive no-pay guarantee.

"I WILL"
I'll be a flower or a weed,
Why should we strive when all things are decreed?
As well may planets tug against the sun,
Or rivers, by resolving, cease to run,
As we by striving rule our word or deed,
All Darwin's science and all Calvin's creed,
Tell the same truth; that which is done is done,
And we, elect or damned ere life

begin,
Foredoomed to be a flower or a weed,
Upon the plastic wax of infancy
A thousand years of habit set their seal;
Such as our fathers were, for we or weal,
Strive we or shirk we, such we, too must be,
Thus Reason speaks, and having talked her fill,
Something, within us, answering, says: "I will."

IN THE TRACK OF THE STORM

By EMMA BELL MILES

(Copyright, 1910, by the Pearson Publishing Co.)

Mid-April should, according to the mountaineer's calendar, see the end of the "borrowed days," but here it was a week past, and yet there were no signs of a satisfactory settlement between March and April. Perhaps the year, still in arrears for an unusually splendid autumn pageant, had borrowed the major portion of the month. Certainly there lingered, round the pond's brim, frosts of a wintry wooliness.

To-day, however, had turned suddenly warm. The fall of dusk had brought with it an apparition of singular beauty—a perfectly pink moon, blooming full like a rose over the smoky horizon, looking across the low fields, and changing as it mounted to a disk of copper—to an orange—to a deep golden bowl; a fairy presence, but soon overwhelmed by a rolling and billowing of heavy clouds.

Jensy watched it as she crooned her baby to sleep; she now lay beside him with a guarding arm thrown clear of the pillow. A young mother, whose ears are quickened with constant listening for the small cry, wakes more readily than does the open-air toiler. She was roused toward midnight by the rattling crash of something falling. Lying in the bewilderment of sudden arousing, she heard the wind as it leapt upon their roof, shaking it by the four corners, tearing like a wild beast at the stoutly mortised timbers. For a moment she remained hearkening to the rising gusts, then summoned Harvey to wakefulness.

"Must be the whippoorwill storm!" he cried, sitting up in bed, listening. "I believe in my soul I never did hear such a racket."

Round the house the tempest roared like a battle; the loins of Chilhowee shivered to an appalling resonance of thunders.

"Looks like somethin' must go," the new householder debated. "Reckon I better try to get them shutters shut."

He was out of bed and at the window when Jensy turned up the flame in the little lamp. This was at once blown out. Harvey could not hold the thick oak shutter; it was wrenched from his grasp and banged against the house. A gust of rain dashed upon the two. In the play of colored lightnings they saw dry leaves and twigs, whirled high, passing the window like flights of arrows. The mother turned from the sight and groped toward the bed where her child lay. They heard a clattering of kitchen things as the back door gave way. When there was a momentary lull about them, sound came up of the gusts rending the forest below; and now and then a crashing and splintering as a tree went down. From over the valley the wind swept in, fierce as from open sea. With every fresh impulse of the gale, a stupendous uproar raged on the sandstone bluffs above; its reverberations boomed as though the whole mountain were hollow, beaten like a drum by wild fighting hands.

Then as abruptly the shutter was flung shut, cutting off the glare, though not the roaring of the storm. Panting, Harvey fastened the latch, and groping forward, found Jensy with the babe in her arms cowering at his feet.

He knelt beside her and put his arm around the two. The house rocked and shook. They could not hear each other speak. The roof crackled and snapped as nail after nail gave to the terrific strain. They crouched on the floor together, listening to the wind's trumpeting loud and louder on the dreadful dark. The baby boy, roused a bit, turned in his mother's arms and slept on.

So tiny a cup of warmth and human kindness is the cabin home, nestled on the floor of the haunted Vast! So short a way its windows let their light into the Black! Our utmost achievement weighs so little; our highest aspirations but prick the lower strata of the air; our loudest cannonade reverberates scarcely higher. If men could realize how alone they are, would they not let go of old spites and vanities—would they not make haste to clasp each other's hands?

If all that earth contains of hate for man were loosed at once—what then? Below in the gulch, where the stream widened to its pond, now brimmed bank-full and churned to foam against the barriers by the sudden down-rush of waters, the elder cabin slept, black and silent. The old folks slumbered within; resentment like a coal at the core of the mother's heart failed to disturb her repose; patient sorrow seemed to smooth Aaron's pillow and lull him the faster asleep. It was just as the creek-pond leaped its bank and came swirling down on the dooryard that the fiercest lunge of that night's storm pounced upon the cabin itself, the old house that had weathered so many wild nights, that had crouched to the beating of so many mountain tempests. And at last, the sleepers awakened to a world of chaos, to terrifying blows from unseen sources and the lash of the storm itself breaking through their habitation.

In that region the vagaries of the swift, boulder-checked mountain streams make land boundaries uncertain. Sometimes a creek in spring flood will change its course, scour off a field and deposit it on some stretch of barren land half a mile away. To-night, Nameless Creek was to christen itself, and thereafter to be known as Hurricane, namesake of the tempest which set it wrecking Verona Brymer's homestead and strewing the wreckage of logs and puncheons, hand-rived boards and shingles for miles along its course.

The old man was spared by log and rafter; gasping, whirled against this and that by the force of the wind, he freed himself at last and looked upon the ruin of his home, a blur of blackness against the steel gray of the storm. By the fantastic illumination of the lightning he saw he was alone and began calling, "Verony! Mother! Oh, Verony!"

NO CHRISTIANS SEE MECCA.

Although one of the most inaccessible cities on earth Mecca each year has visitors in such number that it must be ranked in this particular with London and New York. Even the world's metropolis on the Thames can boast no such cosmopolitan character as is imparted to this mysterious city in the wilderness of Arabia by the myriads of pilgrims, who at the cost of incredible pains annually crowd into its confines.

This city is the oldest place of resort in existence, yet of all the millions who have visited it not a score of Christians are known to have come out alive. No flag of citizenship would save a man's life were he known to be a Christian within the sacred precincts of the city, where the prophet himself decreed that no unbeliever should set foot.

Of the 255 million Moslems in the world only 15½ millions live under the Turkish flag, yet most of them acknowledge the Sultan of Turkey as their caliph, the successor of the prophet. As Mohammed shrewdly foresaw, the Mecca pilgrimage binds together his disciples into a unity which could be effected in no other way.

"Mecca," says Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer of Arabia, "has become the religious capital and the center of universal pilgrimage for one-seventh of the human race."—Harper's Magazine.

THE FINE OLD PURITAN HOMES.

Great Men Have Gone Forth From New England's Square White Houses.

Representatives of all Puritan families who originally settled the Cape Cod peninsula are to be found in every one of the sixteen villages scattered along its coast, living in big, white, comfortable frame houses with green blinds and neatly kept gardens around them.

These houses were built several generations ago, but have been kept up with such care that they are not only good as new, but as a rule are much more comfortable than the "new fangled" cottages that have been built between them. The people who own and live in them are the descendants of the sea rovers who made Cape Cod famous in every foreign port and won for themselves reputations for trading wisely and well.

Yankee shrewdness and thrift were profitable to the present generation as well as to those who have passed. And that explains the comfortable mansions that are no longer needed for the families of the owners and therefore are given up to the summer boarders, now the chief source of revenue.

Great men have gone out from these fine old mansions—not only sea kings, but empire builders and the pioneers of our west, the men who have built up New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and the great cities of the Pacific coast.

DAILY FASHION TALKS

BY MAY MANTON

A GIRLISH FROCK WITH TRIMMING OF SILK.

YOUNG girls are always at their best in simple frocks. This one is smart at the same time. It gives just the straight narrow effect that we are all seeking yet it takes graceful and becoming folds. In the illustration it is made of pale blue henrietta cloth and it is trimmed with silk and combined with chemise and under-sleeves of lace. It is very pretty and very attractive, available for many occasions. If a more dressy effect is wanted the yoke and under-sleeves can be omitted or the yoke only, as liked. If a more serviceable dress is in demand cashmere could be of darker color or figured challis would be pretty trimmed with bands of plain silk. All material that is soft enough to be slightly gathered is appropriate. Crêpe de chine is greatly in vogue and is lovely. Made just in this way with the trimming portions of satin it would make even a more dressy effect than this one, or the dress with the round neck could be made with yoke and sleeve trimming of all-over lace, so that the model allows many possibilities. The blouse is made in peasant style but is slightly full below the shaped yoke. The skirt is straight and can be finished with either the high or natural waist line. Its width at the lower edge is 2½ yards.
